

ganizations including camps, arsenals, hospitals, and the work done for, through or by them, are among the varied interesting features that will contribute to Maryland's historical war data.

The same elaborate detail that has been gathered from Army sources has been duplicated in the files devoted to the records of the Navy and of the Marine Corps, with full recruiting lists, histories, rosters and photographs.

Of non-military war agencies more than 250 have been indexed, and in themselves are of the utmost value. Maryland was the center of much industrial and constructive work during that period, and the files devoted to this phase of the "win the war" activities include records of work done along every conceivable line and are a lasting tribute to the indefatigable labor of Maryland men and women in those days when all hearts and minds were concerned with the great task. The records are of public, semi-public and private organizations.

There is also being made a splendid collection of war exhibits, including several hundred Liberty Loan, Red Cross, Army, Navy and Marine Corps posters, buttons, badges, etc., and various other souvenirs of interest.

In each county of the State a historical committee has been organized to assist in compiling the war records. The chairmen of these County Committees are as follows:
